'Drunk' French chess player concedes match after dozing off

醉棋手西洋棋對弈中打盹被判出局

top-rated French chess player had to concede a game at a major tournament when he dozed off during a match after reportedly showing up three sheets to the wind, local media said.

Russian-born Vladislav Tkachiev was declared "lost on time" after officials at the Kolkata Open Grandmasters found he was unable to continue his game and had to be carried off, the Indian Express said.

"What happened is unfortunate," tournament co-organizer Soumen Majumder told the paper.

"It's in bad taste. Once the event is over, we will hold a meeting and decide how to proceed against this player."

Tkachiev, 35, completed only 15 moves against India's Praveen Kumar in his third-round game lasting over an hour.

"Each time he fell asleep, players around would try to wake him up with a shake of the shoulder," the paper reported alongside photos showing Tkachiev with his head resting on the table.

"Some even offered him water and Tkachiev, having briefly refreshed himself at the changeroom while his opponent waited, dozed off again and eventually had to be carried off."

The paper added that chess star Nigel Short of England expressed disgust at the incident, advising the organizers to promptly eject the player from the tournament. (AFP)

If someone is three sheets to the wind or just three sheets, they are very drunk. This UK expression has its roots in maritime terminology. The sheets in question are the ropes used to fix the main sail in place. If the sheets weren't tied properly the boat would lurch uncontrollably, just like a drunken sailor.

若說某人「three sheets to the wind」或「three sheets」,意指他們喝得酩酊大醉。這個片語源於英國的航海術語。這個片語裡的「the sheets」指的是固定主帆的繩索。若繩索沒有綁好,船就會無法控制地傾斜,就像是喝醉的水手一樣。
