14 發光的城市 AROUND TOWN

FRIDAY, MARCH 5, 2010 • TAIPEI TIMES

and China.

And rumors about his past romances have been spinning out of control. Just before the Lunar claimed in a report that Chou's

past flame, Patty Hou (侯佩岑),

was a virgin, which prompted

New Year holiday, Next Magazine

unwelcome media attention in the Chairman's direction. The hoopla

Around the same time, Chou's singer Devin Wu (吳佩珊), claimed that she gave up her virginity to Chou when she was 16 years old,

talk show Here Comes Kang and in an interview on the popular

The news dogged Chou

Pandamen last weekend, where surrounding Hou: "It wasn't me at a promotional event for

he condemned the rumors

who said such things, it was likely an outsider just making whether she "had gone crazy"

pressured by TV producers to

What Pop Stop finds most appears to have gotten under exaggerate her story.

interesting is how Dog G

the Chairman's skin with a freestyle rap released on the Internet (www.youtube. com/watch?v=RNsJRE3NBZ8),

of society."

which prompted Chou to call the Dog G's offending line: "Chou

just talks about 'diao' all day, but that's just talk, he's never even used it (周屌整天說屌也都只是說說,

in Mandarin for "cool," which frequently pops up in Chou's referring to male genitalia.

songs, but it's also a vulgar term

After calling Dog G a few more names, Chou decided that talking about the rapper wasn't worth his time. So he called on friend and Pandamen co-star Devon

原來沒用過)." "Diao" is a slang word

underground rapper the "scum something up." As for Wu's claim,

he wondered out loud to reporters and speculated that she had been

was fed by a ridiculing song by former label mate, female pop

rapper Dog G (大支).

Xi (康熙來了).

It's complicated.

amage control was the name of the game this past week for several Taiwanese celebrities.

Ethan Ruan (阮經天), star of the hit gangster flick Monga (艋 舺), found himself in a tough spot with his girlfriend, model Tiffany Hsu (許瑋甯), after being spotted at a hotel in Taichung with an unidentified woman last weekend.

According to a play-by-play of events in Apple Daily, Ruan was spotted checking into the Windsor Hotel (裕元花園酒店) at 6am on Sunday, accompanied by a "long-haired young lady around 160cm tall." He checked out at 1pm, paying for the room under his own name and credit card.

As soon as the news broke, Ruan explained that the companion was his "friend's girlfriend," and insisted the two had slept in separate rooms — they stayed in a two-room suite — and that the boyfriend arrived later on. Ruan said he was out at a lounge bar with a group of friends and some of them decided to stay at the hotel because it was too late to return home.

Besides, he said, "if I really wanted to do something [unfaithful], would I be so stupid to use my own name and credit card?"

That stumbling response probably didn't help. Hsu didn't speak to the media at first, only hinting at her mood on Facebook by changing her relationship status from "In a relationship" to "It's complicated."

A day later, however, she put on a brave face and told reporters she believed her beau had been faithful and that all of the people involved were friends. For his part, Ruan said that it was a mistake not to return home and that Hsu was his "everything."

But that wasn't good enough for Apple Daily, which seems to be trying to hint at a replacement for Ruan: Taiwanese American hearthrob Van Ness Wu (吳建豪). The paper made light of the fact that the two are friends and have been frequent collaborators as of late: They co-starred in a popular TV soap opera, and Hsu featured in one of Wu's music videos. Wu probably won't be biting that apple, though. As a recent convert to Christianity, he swore off his wild days and signed a "celibacy card" in 2008. He did make an offer to Hsu, though, offering to "help her pray."

BY ALITA RICKARDS

the past there seemed to be a firm divide between electronica and rock, with fans of either genre often opposed to the other. Since the late 1980s there have been crossovers — think Pet Shop Boys and Willie Nelson's versions of Always on My Mind. But never before have the distinctions blurred so much between different genres of music than in our modern age of mashups and fusion bands.

This weekend's lineup at VU Live House is no exception. None of the bands playing at tomorrow's Hungry Ear party stick to one recognizable genre. The closest to doing so is Collider, with a brooding post-rock sensibility that has lost none of its dark beauty with the addition of bassist Thomas Squires. Vocalist Leon LaPointe is no longer with the band, which is now entirely instrumental. That's not a big change as LaPointe was inclined to use his voice like an instrument anyway.

Space Funk fuses electro, disco and funk, and as if that weren't enough variety, composer Viba Paul Gouriet has also been delving into swing music, albeit electro-swing.

Plover's sound is ambient, with pretty guitar riffs and spacey effects in some songs, while others are more like metal ballads with gothic wailing and tonnes of feedback.

Roughhausen's Jeff Stoddard adds to his industrial past working with Skinny Puppy and Front Line Assembly and gets with the times by merging a live breakcore set suffused with hard chemical beats, break beats and techno. Molly Lin (林孟珊) from Nekojam joins in on bass.

Stoddard is brave to be playing at VU again after his last two shows there suffered crippling sound problems. The issues seem to stem more from a lack of trained staff than from equipment, and detract from Roughhausen's signature hard-core sound. Hopefully that will be sorted out for the show this time so the audience can get the full effect of the music.

Relatively new on the scene is 80s revival, synth pop/ punk, hip-hop band Sunset Rollercoaster, which plays a watching the Winter Olympics ice skating competition whetted your appetite for sequins and pirouettes, you're in luck. More than 90 ballroom and Latin-style dancers from over 25 countries will compete in the 2010 Open Professional Ballroom Dance Championship — Asian Tour Taipei Open (2010職業國標舞世界大賽亞巡賽台北站) tomorrow at the Taipei Arena (台北小巨蛋), the last stop in the competition. At stake is a top prize of NT$3.3 million.

The competition, which is recognized and overseen by the World Dance Council, was launched in 2008 by the Taiwan International Sport Dance Development Association (TISDDA, 中華民國國際運動舞 蹈發展協會). TISDA'S goal is to establish a dance contest on par with similar events held in Europe and the US. Before the event was launched, Japan was the only Asian country to host world-class ballroom dance competitions. This year marks the second time the Open Professional Ballroom Dance Championship — Asian Tour Taipei Open has been held. According to TISDDA, the first attracted more than 10,000 spectators in Taipei. This year's contest traveled to South Korea and Macau and made two stops in Japan.

Heaven knows anything goes monthly gig at The Wall. The musicians have now also begun including blues and rock in their sets: "It definitely surprised some people," said Kevin Lee (李柏澔) who plays bass and keyboard. We later found out that some fans expecting our electronica set that night had posted on The Wall's Web site forum," he said. "Something along the lines of 'What happened to Sunset Rollercoaster?'" — though failing to mention whether or not they had liked the show."

Sunset Rollercoaster rides a multi-genre wave

of sound. PHOTO COURTESY OF SUNSET ROLLERCOASTE

Lee and bandmate Kuo Kuo (曾 國宏), who plays guitar and bass and "likes to fool around on his laptop," says Kuo, are both still in college, while drummer Sonoko (羅尊龍) teaches drumming at various schools in Taipei. "At times it's impossible to stick a label on the music we make," said Lee. "People who have come and seen our shows know that it's almost completely different every time around. In a way, it's because our musicality is constantly evolving, and we're still looking for that single spot on which to settle down." Bands used to get together to rehearse in garages, basements and studios, but modern collaboration has evolved into a more solitary pursuit. "Our songs start out as ideas that we usually create individually at home which later find completion when the three of us get a chance to put it together," said Lee. "It's a really collective setup we have going, and working together to complete songs that we start at home leads to some exciting new ideas."

He adds that regularly writing new music keeps the process fresh for the band and phases out old songs for new ideas. "The best aspect about this method is that it keeps us interested in our own music," he said.

One of the benefits of artist's freedom in dabbling in any genre they choose is that the style — while perhaps lacking polish — is always new, which appeals to a generation used to the Internet, YouTube and Facebook.

"It's impossible to predict which set we'll be using - electronica or rock," said Lee. "It depends entirely upon our mood the day of the show."

PERFORMANCE NOTES:

WHAT: Hungry Ear 2 WHERE: VU Live House (地下絲絨), B1, 77, Wuchang St Sec 2, Taipei City (台北市武昌街二段77號B1) WHEN: Tomorrow from 8pm to 3am ADMISSION: NT$350, includes one drink

BY CATHERINE SHU

Glitter on the dance floor

CHAMPIONSHIP NOTES:

WHAT: 2010 Open Professional Dance Championships — Asian Tour Taipei Open WHERE: Taipei Arena (台北小巨蛋), 2, Nanjing E Rd Sec 4, Taipei City (台北市南京東路四段2號) WHEN: Tomorrow from 10am to 9:30pm ADMISSION: NT$500 and NT$3,600, available at the door or through 7-Eleven ibon kiosks ON THE NET: www.tisdda.org

Song (彈頭) to dish out some more trash talk. "If Dog G did not rely on scolding other people, he would be an unknown singer," Song was quoted as saying by newschannelasia.com.

But Dog G says he's got a reason to scold. He told our sister paper, the Liberty Times, that he wrote the song because he believes that the media "objectifies" women and that it shouldn't dwell on Mando-pop big daddy and actor whether or not a woman is a virgin.

Competitors hail mainly from Japan and the US, with some couples coming from as far away as Finland, Ukraine — and Azerbaijan. Dancers range in age from under 16 to senior citizens. Couples to keep an eye on include Americans Arunas Bizokas and Katusha Demidova, ballroom dancers who have already triumphed in the Japan, South Korea and Macau stops of the tour, and Victor Fung and Anastasia Murayama, also representing the US, who are currently among the top three Latin dance couples in the competition.

More than 90 dancers will compete tomorrow at the 2010 Open Professional Ballroom Dance Championship — Asian Tour Taipei Open. PHOTO: EP/

BY DAVID CHEN

RESTAURANTS

Yue Yuan 越苑

Address: 8, Ln 103, Dunhua S Rd Sec 2, Taipei City (台北市敦化南路二段103巷8號) Open: Mondays to Fridays 11:30am to 3pm and 5:30pm to 9pm, Saturdays and Sundays Telephone: (02) 2701-2523 11:30am to 9pm Details: English and Chinese menu, credit cards not accepted, reservations strongly recommended Average meal: NT$200

ue Yuan (越苑) has gained a kind of cult following for its beef pho, or Vietnamese beef noodle soup, and bahn mi, or baguette sandwiches, since opening its first location last year off Dunhua North Road (敦化北路). Now it has a new branch, which opened in November between The Diner and Carnegie's in an alley off Dunhua South Road (敦化南路).

According to Vietnamese Pho Noodles (www.lovingpho.com), one of many Web sites about "pho noodles for lovers of pho," the soup should come garnished with fresh basil, bean sprouts, lime and sliced chili peppers, as well as the important cilantro.

All except the cilantro arrived at my table on a small plate immediately after ordering the rare steak pho (NT$140/NT$170). As I was searching around for the cilantro, my server came over to tell me that there was a shortage of it, apologizing profusely for its absence (though they still add it to the broth).

The "small" bowl that arrived soon after was much larger than anticipated. A nest of rice noodles at the bottom propped up slices of rare lean beef topped with shaved onions. I added the sprouts, basil and other garnishes and swirled it around, reveling in the fragrant smell. The broth's notable beef flavor was so distractingly good that I downed half the order before calling the server over to inquire about the bottles of hoisin and Sriracha Chili Sauce sitting on each of the restaurant's white tables.

Pho purists say that hoisin and chili sauces should be added to the broth upon serving — that is unless the broth can stand on its own. My server, perplexed perhaps that I was asking after finishing much of the order, proceeded to add a half teaspoon of each to a small dish and told me to mix it up and either use it as a dipping sauce for the meat or add it to the broth. I did the latter because I'd already consumed most of the beef. The mixture added a hot zing to the hints of sour lime and somewhat sweet basil. Next time, however, I won't bother adding the condiments because the broth requires none.

Another reason to frequent Yue Yuan is its French baguette sandwiches. Generous portions of grilled chicken (NT$120, beef and pork versions are also available) came nestled inside the warm crusty baguette that I ordered. Sprigs of cilantro enlivened an already delicious combination of julienned pickled carrots and radishes and just the right amount of mayo and cracked pepper. Netizens are nuts about this hoagie and after one bite I could understand why. If you go, this is a sandwich you don't want to miss out on. Yue Yuan keeps its decor and menu simple. The clean and open interior features buttery yellow walls on one side and brick motif wallpaper on the other. The Chinese and English menu contains no pictures, though the numerous servers running around will patiently explain its contents.

PHOTO: NOAH BUCHAN, TAIPEI TIME

BY NOAH BUCHAN

Yue Yuan keeps it simple.

Yue Yuan's other location is at 12, Ln 155, Dunhua N Rd, Taipei City (台北市敦化北路155巷12號). Tel: (02) 2718-0660.

Arvorig

Address: 325, Roosevelt Rd Sec 3, Taipei City (台北市羅斯福路三段325號) Telephone: (02) 2363-5600 Open: 11:30am to 9pm, closed on Mondays Average meal: NT$130 to NT$200 Details: Credit cards not accepted ou can't see a second-run movie for NT$100 anymore in Gongguan (公館) because the Great Century Theater (大 世紀戲院) is gone — it closed a year and a half ago — but you can go to the same locale and enjoy authentic French crepes for around the same price.

Arvorig, which was opened by French expatriate Christophe Chevance and his wife Sunny Fan (范儷瓊) in December last year, is a modest but charming creperie located in what used to be Great Century's ticket booth.

The proprietors have brightened up their rented corner of a dark and dingy first-floor lobby with a thorough cleaning, fresh paint job and a friendly vibe. Patrons can sit in front of the kitchen at the bar, which seats 12 people, listen to French ska playing on the stereo and watch Chevance whip up the culinary specialty of his native Brittany: sweet crepes and savory galettes.

With around 40 choices, there's a crepe for every sweet tooth. For something simple, go for a plain crepe (NT$30) or sugar and lemon (NT$50). Canadians will appreciate the maple syrup crepe (NT$80), and the "handmade caramel" (NT$50) is worth a try as Chevance makes his own sauce. The shop also recommends the > Arvorig's galette with ham, tomato sauce, mozzarella and Parmesan cheeses and cherry tomatoes is a tasty, lighter alternative to pizza.

> > PHOTO: DAVID CHEN, TAIPEI TIMES

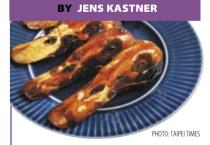

After they decided to settle in Taipei, Fan's hometown, Chevance realized he didn't want to live here without a taste of home.

The galettes, which are made of buckwheat flour, make for a nice light lunch or supper. One of ingredients, such as the peach and the more deluxe versions, which comes with ham, tomato sauce, mozzarella and Parmesan cheeses and cherry tomatoes, offers a tasty, healthy alternative to pizza for NT$140. For heartier appetites, there's the galette with German crepes are delicious. They are soft, sausage, onions, mozzarella, thin and almost fleshy with a slight Parmesan cheese and sour cream for NT$160. Arvorig's menu is vegetarian friendly. For galettes, there are actually more non-meat flour and milk — and not a drop of options. Diners can choose from three different varieties that have vegetarian ham (NT$130) or one with goat cheese, lettuce, honey and walnut (NT$120).

For crepe-lovers, Arvorig has made a timely arrival. Mamm Goz, another Taipei establishment that served Breton cuisine, closed for business early last year. While the latter was a more upscale venture and had a fancier menu, Arvorig caters more to a budget-minded clientele and students from the neighboring National Taiwan University. Be prepared to wait a little longer than normal for your order, especially at lunchtime, which was busy when the Taipei Times visited earlier this week. Chevance works fast and can cook several crepes and galettes at a time, but the food won't arrive as quickly as a bowl of noodles or a rice lunch plate. The extra five to seven minute wait, however, is worth it.

the spirit of Maoist self-criticism, Tidbits as a confession to make. For too long ave we focused on Western food and neglected the bountiful Taiwanese chow to be found on our very doorstep. But instead of going into exile or purging our ranks, rehabilitation comes, this week, in the form of deep-fried duck head.

Not just any old duck head, though. Dongshan duck head, a recipe said to originate in Dongshan Village, Tainan County (台南縣東山鄉).

Fafa Dongshan Duck Head (發發東山鴨 頭) stall's slogan says it all: "The marinade is the soul of Dongshan duck head."

For this version of the delicacy, malt sugar replaces the soy sauce usually used to make the brine in which the heads are soaked for hours before hitting the fat. The marinade, which includes Chinese medicinal herbs, ensures the heads don't become dry or hard after being deep-fried Even the skull and beak can be eaten.

Also in Taipei, Jinshang Dongshan Duck Head (金賞東山鴨頭) adds star anise and eight Chinese medical herbs and malt to its marinade.

Fafa Dongshan Duck Head 發發東山鴨頭

Address: Intersection of Ningxia Road and Pingyang Street (台北市寧夏路、平陽街交

Telephone: 0981-029-858 Open: 4:30pm to 12:30am Price: NT$20 per head

Jinshang Dongshan Duck Head 金賞東山鴨頭

Address: In front of 138 Raohe Street, Taipei City (台北市饒河街138號前) Telephone: 0922-174-731 Open: 6pm to 1am Price: NT$40 per head water, says Fan. This is a first restaurant venture for Chevance and Fan, who met while working for a French pop musical production of Romeo and Juliet. He was on the stage crew and she was a translator.

chocolate and freshly shredded and baked coconut (NT$90) for Arvorig also offers crepes with fresh banana, apple and imported pear, which range from NT$70 to NT$100. But note that some pineapple options, are canned.

As the menu is quite big, it would

But it's hard to go wrong with be nice if the shop listed which any of the flavors as Chevance's buttery crisp. This homemade goodness comes from a batter

recipe that uses only eggs, white ingredients were fresh.

something different.